Translation Notes: Chapter 1

These are notes on various aspects of the translation, plain and simple.
Hopefully you will find this page enlightening, even if it is a bit plain-looking.

A quick note on "Chivalrous power":
In the real world, yakuza refer to themselves as "chivalrous organizations", hence the "chivalrous power" referred to when the yakuza in this series perform a special attack.

Attack names:

Attacks in this series have a compound of Chinese characters that you would usually never see in real life, and a reading to the side that is more relevant to modern readers of Japanese that roughly corresponds to the Chinese characters. In our English version, we have romanized the reading given and also have the literal meaning of the Chinese text below the reading. Here is a rundown of the attacks in this chapter:

Lard Paradise: The meaning of the original characters is something like "Woman-Killing Oil Hell". The "Woman-killing" part of the compound can also refer to a handsome man, or "lady killer" as in English, but given the attacker's appearance, this is unlikely, or it is used as a sort of joke. Take it as you will.
The phonetic reading given is RA-DO PARADAISU, or "Lard Paradise".

Faction names:

Given that these are names that often do not translate to English very well, we have decided to call them by their readings rather than by a translation.

Gusha Senmetsu Clan: "Gusha" means "fool", "Senmetsu" means "extermination", so this clan name translates to something like "Fool Exterminating Clan".
Gourmet Clan: The reading given ("gurume", a Japanese loan word from "gourmet") is somewhat different from the Chinese characters given. The meaning of the original characters is something like "Patriotic Gourmet Clan". The "Gourmet" part was retained, but the "Patriotism" was lost somewhere.

Other:

p. 23-25: The characters written on the blackboard have the same pronunciation as the word meaning "final exam", but the first character in the word for exam ("shi", meaning "try") has been replaced with a different character ("shi", meaning "death"). In other words, this is a play on words that can't be translated very easily. We have translated this as "final deathmatch", which, while not much of a pun, should get the idea across.
p. 26-27: Every day before beginning class in Japanese schools, there is a ritual where the students are ordered to stand and bow, and then to sit. In the original Japanese, on these pages, the second character of "be seated" has been replaced with a character meaning "to repel". In other words, this has the same pronunciation as "be seated" but means something more along the lines of "defend yourself". This is another play on words of a common Japanese word you see in school.
p.36: Seabura Tarou's name, while it is a real name, has the meaning of something like "Back-oil Fat Man". If I were to localize this guy's name, I would make it something like Fatz McOiler.
p. 40: "Shikigei". This literally means something like "rite tattoo", but the meaning behind this will be explained in a couple chapters, so don't worry too much about this yet.
p. 56: In Japanese the words for "grease" and "corpse" are pronounced the same. This segment seems to be a play on words in the original Japanese.

Translation Notes: Chapter 2

There's not a whole lot to explain in this chapter

Attack names:

Attacks in this series have a compound of Chinese characters that you would usually never see in real life, and a reading to the side that is more relevant to modern readers of Japanese that roughly corresponds to the Chinese characters. In our English version, we have romanized the reading given and also have the literal meaning of the Chinese text below the reading. Here is a rundown of the attacks in this chapter:

Kuroibara: The Chinese characters mean something like "Black Thorn Dissolution". It's pretty straightforward so I don't think I need to explain anything else
The phonetic reading given is KUROIBARA, which means "Black Thorns" or "Black Rose".

This isn't a translation note exactly, but it's worth mentioning since there's plenty of space left. As you may know, manga in Japan are typically first serialized in a magazine, then once enough chapters have built up, they're collected into volumes. There are typically small changes made to the chapters in volume releases, such as some polishing done to the art, some nudity and violence cover removed, and other such things. However, with Yakuza Girl, many parts of the volume version have been completely rewritten and redrawn, with some completely different scenarios. Because of this, we've decided we should scanlate both the magazine version and the volume version so you guys can see everything as readers in Japan have. Still, scans of volume 1 are not yet available, so it may be some time before we're able to release the volume versions. You'll be able to get the story and important bits by reading only one version, but for those who enjoy the series and want to see a slightly different take on some things (with more nudity >__>), look forward to our volume releases!

There's still some space left, so here's an example of how dramatic some of the changes are, with a side-by-side comparison of a few pages. Sorry for the lack of quality on the volume versions.

Another fun chapter

Enjoy!

Translation Notes: Chapter 3

There was space at the end so I drew a fanart of Akari. I put a lot of effort into it!

Attack names:

Attacks in this series have a compound of Chinese characters that you would usually never see in real life, and a reading to the side that is more relevant to modern readers of Japanese that roughly corresponds to the Chinese characters. In our English version, we have romanized the reading given and also have the literal meaning of the Chinese text below the reading. Here is a rundown of the attacks in this chapter:

Hana to Hebi: The Chinese characters mean something like "Flower-Slaughtering Snake". If I didn't know better, I'd say this was some serious Freudian imagery at work. I have translated it as "Flower-Butchering Snake".
The phonetic reading given is simply HANA TO HEBI, which means "Flower and Snake", and also happens to be the name of an old Japanese softcore porn movie, which had a remake a couple years ago. You know you want to see it now.

Faction names:

Given that these are names that often do not translate to English very well, we have decided to call them by their readings rather than by a translation.

Dai Yaguruma Clan: "Dai" means "great", and a "yaguruma" is a decorative windmill used with carp streamers. I think it's fair to say this clan name is just a bit strange.

Other:

Throughout the chapter: I hope you don't mind the rather constant usage of swears in this chapter. I normally try to keep them to a minimum when it's not fitting, but the content in this series is becoming increasingly violent/sexual and a couple rather... "rebellious and disrespectful" characters were introduced this time, so it seemed appropriate. If you dislike it (or anything else regarding the translation, for that matter), feel free to voice your opinion, we'll be doing these chapters again for the volume version, assuming it's ever scanned, so any criticism wouldn't be a waste.
p. 2-3, 13: The Chinese character in the background is pronounced SEN, and means "massacre". It is the first character in the word "Senmetsu" from "Gusha Senmetsu".
p. 22: The name "Yuugao" means "Evening Face", and "Asagao" means "Morning Face". Given this name similarity and their similar appearance, I think these two are an incestuous couple and Asagao is indeed Yuugao's real 'nee-chan'. Just thought you should know.

Translation Notes: Chapter 4

RIP AND TEAR YOUR GUTS

Attack names:

Attacks in this series have a compound of Chinese characters that you would usually never see in real life, and a reading to the side that is more relevant to modern readers of Japanese that roughly corresponds to the Chinese characters. In our English version, we have romanized the reading given and also have the literal meaning of the Chinese text below the reading. Here is a rundown of the attacks in this chapter:

Atum: The reading given is ATUMU, most likely the Egyptian god Atum. The Chinese characters given mean "thief" and "body/soul" respectively. In ancient Egyptian mythology, it was said that the god Atum would take a dead king's soul from his pyramid into the heavens, which is why I decided to translate it as "Soul Stealer".

Herahera Dokei: The reading given has been romanized exactly and corresponds to the Chinese characters, so there's nothing to explain there.

The Chinese characters mean "gut-gut angry punishment", which has been translated as "Furious Punishment From the Gut". Closer to a complete sentence than usual, but not quite there.

Mystletain: The reading given is MISUTORUTEIN, which can be romanized as "Mystletain". If you play a lot of fantasy-themed video games like Castlevania or Fire Emblem, you may remember special weapons with this name.

The Chinese characters given mean "god-killing person", further corresponding to the Norse story where Baldr is killed with the spear made of mistletoe known as Mystletain.

Udjat: The reading given is UJATO, which seems to correspond to Udjat, the Eye of the Egyptian god, Horus. It would also make sense in the context that all of Asuka's chivalrous powers seem to be named after objects from Egyptian mythology.

The Chinese characters given mean "ward off evil", as the Udjat is, according to Egyptian mythology, indeed supposed to ward off evil. I translated it as "Bane of Evil".

Other:

p. 04: Looks like I was right about Yuugao and Asagao being blood-related, but I guess it goes even further than that. Sweet. Also, the Chinese character in the background of the first panel says "Yaguruma".

p. 08: Most of the Dai Yaguruma Clan refer to their commander as "Aneki" (or "nee-sama" as in the last chapter). This is a term used by real-life gangs and such to refer to a leader, and basically means "big sister", and is more a term of endearment than actually meaning a blood-related older sister. In this case, though, the commander probably is actually their big sister.

p. 12: ...No, never mind, I have no comment on this page.

Chapter 5: "Reason"

IT'S BEEN ONE WEEK SINCE I TRANSFERRED INTO DAIHON ACADEMY...

MY DORM WAS DESTROYED BY THE DAI YAGURUMA CLAN, AND THE REPAIRS THAT WERE ARRANGED BY THE HEADMASTER SEEM TO BE FINISHED.

THE FINAL DEATH-MATCH, THE SHIKIGEI INITIATION, THE RAID...

Not much to say this time, exept for a quick explanation of the "principle of causality" which a lot of people may not be familiar with. It's basically the belief that karma rules what happens in the world. That's it, really.
